From Advocacy to Organizing: Enlisting Friends in the Fight for Vaccination Andy Marso

- Remarks
- Q&A/Discussion

Andy Marso has been an advocate for vaccines since 2004, when he almost died of a bacterial meningitis infection and lost parts of all four limbs. In recent years he has seen anti-vaccine activists move from fringe figures to an increasingly organized, increasingly influential group. Believing it's no longer enough to just tell his own story, Marso is now trying to use his social networks to bring more pro-vaccine Kansans into the advocacy sphere.
